Mr. John Whithead, the well-known naturalist, who has probably a better knowledge of the Philippine Islands than any living authority, informs me that there are three distinct races in the Island of Luzon, the Spaniards, the well-to-do Indian planters, and the Negroes. Of the Spaniards I heard no account there, but saw many on the island. There is a huge crater, fully 100 yards in diameter and is occasionally eruptive. The last eruption was in 1896. There are mammals found on the mountains, rodents and small wild cats. The birds are similar to those found in the great Himalayan chain. Cocoon and pupae are plentifully near the shore, but the cocoons are infested with parasites.

The island may be said to be thickly
